The entering of the courtroom was perhaps the greatest ordeal in the history of the little woman's life. She knew what to expect, but she could not prepare to unconsciously bear the gaze of the curious. As she stepped quickly to the chair awaiting her, there was an expression of despair on her face. There was not a soul in the room she had ever seen before. Every one was an entire stranger, except the matron and counsel. For a long time it has urged the desirability of "trading up" in qualities, combined with price-not "profiting up", that is, raising the price but not the quality, as some dealers have done.

The following appeared in "The Daily Trade Record" Dec. 12, 1906:

We shall not withdraw the $10.00 Suits from sale in the event that the increase of salaries should be asked for by the President, and granted. Because we know now, from numbers of men who buy that priced suit, and who have told us so, that many are "glad they can buy of us."
